

2025: Our year in giving back

Raymond James is committed to giving back to communities where we live and work. We continued to honor this tradition of service throughout 2025.

Raymond James began the year with a powerful commitment to support communities in crisis. In the wake of hurricanes Helene and Milton, the firm and its leadership team contributed nearly $11 million to associate and community relief, including stipends for eligible associates and donations to Friends of Raymond James, the American Red Cross and other community partners.

To thank associates for their tremendous generosity, dedication and care during a hectic time, Raymond James welcomed associates, advisors and their families to the home office for complimentary hot meals and supplies.

Despite the challenges posed by these disasters, our United Way campaign exceeded expectations. Even in the midst of hurricane recovery, we were humbled and inspired by the generosity of our associates, who helped raise a record-breaking $7.8 million with the help of the firm’s dollar-for-dollar match.

Our Ready for School initiative continues our three-year commitment of $8 million to partner organizations focused on helping students achieve their unique goals inside the classroom, outside the classroom and beyond. During Raymond James Cares Month, more than 3,500 volunteers gave over 12,800 hours to 313 organizations, raising $458,000 in monetary donations and packing over 119,500 meals. We also continued to invest locally in our Memphis community and launched new community engagement efforts in Southfield and New York, expanding our footprint and deepening our impact.
